Margaret Coull DPAGB EFIAP ARPS

One of the best-loved and most respected members of St Andrews Photographic Society, Margaret Coull, died in January after a long battle with cancer, faced stoically, with her usual good humour.

Margaret took up photography seriously in the 1990s, on retiring from primary school teaching. Over the next twenty years she served the Society for two years as President and for ten years as their Internal Competition Secretary. She also ran a B&B and many photographic visitors enjoyed her hospitality. She invited all club members to drop in on alternate Monday evenings to enjoy the social chat, to discuss photographic matters, solve problems with cameras and computers, try new techniques and feast on home-made scones. The annual summer supper party in her colourful garden provided many successful images for all.

Margaret soon merged her interests in travel and wildlife with her photography. A trip to Japan, in a group led by Andy Rouse, whetted her appetite. She went to Namibia and Madagascar with Martin Withers' groups. Often, she preferred to sit quietly by herself to observe and to let the wildlife come to her. In 2005 she went to the tiger reserve at Bandhavgarh and returned three times, building up a friendship with the drivers, who appreciated her skills and feeling for the animals and would take her to less frequently visited viewpoints. Providing her with outstanding opportunities, much superior to those taken by TV professionals, at the same location.

Her exhibition in Dundee, "Land of the Tigers", was a great public success. Her outstanding slides of snow monkeys, lemurs and tigers will remain in the visual memory of anyone who looked at Salons in the first decade of this century.

But she wasn't simply a wildlife photographer: she created, in all media, atmospheric landscapes and often sympathetic or quirky details of objects and people. In later years she went repeatedly on independent trips, along with like-minded photographer Tony McDade APAGB. Only six months ago she won the cup in the Society's annual print exhibition.
